Acknowledgements

Our thanks go to our entire research team who confirmed this medical breakthrough with ingenuity and perseverance. First and foremost we owe our appreciation to Dr. Waheed Roomi, the head of our cancer research department who conducted and supervised these important experiments for more than a decade. We also thank Dr. Shrirang Netke, Dr. Vadim Ivanov, Dr. Raxit Jarwalla, Nusrath Roomi and Tatiana Kalinovsky for promoting this breakthrough research.

Our thanks go to Lisa Smith for assistance in the layout of this book as well as Cathy Flowers and John Journey for reading corrections.

We are grateful to Betsy Long, Earle Hall, Christian Kammler and Thomas Wenn, and Paul Anthony Taylor for organisational support.

We also wish to express our gratitude to all members of our international legal team that have worked for more than a decade to protect this breakthrough against the legal attacks of the status quo lobby.

We thank Werner Pilniok, Baerbel Saliger and all other patients who had the courage to publicly tell their life story.

We pay special reverence to those patients, young and old, who failed in their efforts to fight the disease, and who may have had a chance had they not lost so much time in the deadlocks of conventional medicine.

We are especially grateful to August Kowalczyk, Jerzy Ulatowski and other survivors of the Auschwitz concentration camp. They remain a lasting inspiration to us and our work. We are united with them in the commitment: 'Never again!'

Particular thanks go to the thousands of members of our international Health Alliance who have supported our research for more than a decade. Without you this breakthrough would not have been possible.

We thank our families for their support and patience.

We also thank Andy and Jamie Kerr for an inspirational environment when we wrote this book.

Finally, our thanks go to all those who have remained an invaluable source of motivation to us through their skepticism and opposition.

A Call for Change!

CALL FOR 'MOVEMENT OF LIFE'

The most fundamental human rights are the rights to health and life. These rights are threatened by global corporate interests that consider the human body as their marketplace and source of unlimited profits. Today, at the beginning of the 21st Century, the people of the world must unite to protect inalienable human rights.

THE RIGHT TO HEALTH

The protection of our health is the most important human right. Over the past century, our health has come under the increasing influence of an investment industry that thrives from the continuation and expansion of diseases as markets for patented drugs. The efforts by pharmaceutical corporations to monopolise human health on a global level have become the greatest obstacle to the prevention, and ultimately the eradication, of today's most common diseases.

Any business model that is based on the deliberate expansion of diseases violates the fundamental human right to health and must be prohibited worldwide. This will pave the way for mankind to largely eliminate heart disease, cancer and many other diseases within this century.

THE RIGHT TO LIFE

In a similar way, the right to the biological foundation of life is threatened by these very same corporate interests. The human genome – the blueprint of life and the biological basis of our existence – has become the target of large-scale commercial exploitation through the patenting of genes.

The genetic code is the inalienable property of all mankind. All efforts to commercialise this genetic code, with the goal to rebuild, sell and manipulate the human body or parts of it for corporate gain, must be prohibited worldwide. The knowledge of our blueprint of life should be exclusively used to benefit all mankind.

THE RIGHT TO NATURAL FOOD

Likewise, the genetic information of all plants, and the food that has been growing in our fields and gardens for millennia belongs to all mankind. Manipulation and alteration of the genetic code of plants, with the goal of patenting them and creating global market monopolies of human nutrition, bears the danger that our food supplies are abused to benefit corporate interests. The monopolisation of our food enables corporate control over the fate of entire societies. This undermines the fundamentals of democracy and violates human rights. Access to healthy, unaltered food is a precondition for a healthy society.

A BREATHTAKING PERSPECTIVE

As a consequence, the giant economic and human resources that will be freed following the liberation of human health can be used to fight the most burning global problems of our time, including; hunger, malnutrition, poverty, illiteracy, unemployment and environmental threats.

SUPPORT THE MOVEMENT OF LIFE

These basic rights will not be given voluntarily to you by the status quo. We, the people of the world, need to defend our fundamental human rights, now. This is the goal of the 'Movement of Life'!
